Filling in the Blanks

Every week people contact the HAHS Museum searching for information to fill in the blanks of their community's or family's history. Sometimes we can help. Other times the information seems to be lost in the past, and we have no resources to help.

Or maybe we should say that we have no resources yet. Fortunately, requests are not the only things that come in each week. Artifacts and printed materials that have been hidden away for years and recently uncovered arrive as well. It is through these materials that we can answer the questions and rediscover the Hattiesburg area's lost past.

Recently, a photocopy of a 1908 Hattiesburg Miss. promotional publication arrived. This Industrial Edition was published under the direction of the Commercial Club and is so rare that even the Mississippi State Department of Archives and History does not have a copy. The introduction states, "to attain the highest pinnacle of power and influence in Mississippi is the ambition of the Hattiesburg Commercial Club, and knowing that righteous power and influence can only be gained and retained by honest and straightforward methods, the Club has adopted for its motto, 'Truthfulness and Exactness' in all its work "

From the Commercial Club publication we can now answer more completely the question: "What and where was the Hattiesburg Business College?" (See the answer on the next page.)

Picture exactly as printed in the 1908 publication.

“This magnificent institution with its new $100,000 equipment is located in the southern suburbs of the city. It has recitation room for over five hundred students and boarding accommodations for about three hundred. The buildings are supplied with steam heat, electric lights, artesian water, hot and cold tub and shower baths, and sewerage. It has a library of thousands of selected works. It maintains the usual college courses, and offers special facilities in Domestic Science, Art, Expression and Music. This institution is managed by a faculty of sixteen officers and teachers, and during the present session has enrolled over 380 students.

The Hattiesburg Business College with its three officers and nearly one hundred students is also domiciled in the above buildings.”

Page 37 of the publication gives additional information:

Hattiesburg Business College

“Prof. J. J. Ferguson, principal of the Hattiesburg Business College, came to Hattiesburg from Meridian, Miss. about two years ago. He was principal of the Macon-Andrews Business College at Meridian for several years.

The Hattiesburg Business College has now about eighty pupils enrolled. The school, while a separate corporation from the South Mississippi College, is located on the same campus, this being done to give the pupils the benefit of the boarding facilities connected therewith.

The courses of study are book-keeping, shorthand, typewriting, penmanship, mathematics, spelling, English and commercial law and banking.

Prof. Ferguson has filled a long felt want in the establishment of his school in Hattiesburg. The young ladies and young men of the community who are fitting themselves for useful lives in the world of business need not go away for the necessary training, but can stay at home under the influences of parental care, while those from out of town localities who avail themselves of the advantages here offered will have the same care and influence surrounding them in the good home of the college as they would get at home.”

Additional information can be found in the Hattiesburg American Golden Jubilee Edition of Wednesday October 26, 1932, on page B8 in “Women’s College Serves Girls of Wide Area Well, Now in 21st Term,” written by Jeannette Lawrence. The article traces the beginning of Mississippi Woman’s College (now William Carey University) back to South Mississippi College and the Business College. She states that a campus of 15 acres was secured in the southwestern portion of Hattiesburg, and three large two-story buildings were erected—one administration building and two dorms (shown in the picture on page one).

The school had great success for several years, but the loss of the administration building to fire in 1910 closed South Miss. College. In 1911, W.S.F. Tatum purchased the property for the school that would become William Carey. The Hattiesburg Business College moved to downtown Hattiesburg and continued to operate at 201 West Pine Street. It is believed to have closed in 1937.

The question is, are you qualified to hold a responsible position? Have you had a thorough commercial training? Bankers, Merchants, and Manufacturers want you if you are competent. Now is Your Chance. Two roads are open to young people. One requires no training and leads to failure. The other requires training and leads to success. We prepare young men and women and start them on the road to success by securing them high-salaried positions. Fine climate, board cheap. Write for illustrated catalog and further information,
HATTIESBURG BUSINESS COLLEGE, HATTIESBURG, MISS.

1908 advertisement

The following conversation is much too common at the HAHS Museum: “We’re sorry. You are ten, twenty, or thirty years too late. Everyone who knew is no longer here.” “I don’t know why I waited so long. It just didn’t seem to matter when I was younger.”

When the younger members of your family say that they are not interested in your accounts of the past, just remember that one day they WILL be interested, and you may not be here to relate the tales.

So tell them the stories anyway. Write them down. Label the photos, and explain the who, what, when, where and why about each picture. Record your memories or make a CD or DVD. Keep this chronicle safe for the future when those who did not want to listen will be glad that you left them the information to fill in the blanks
